

Law of Financial Markets

The banking and financial services sector employs a large number of young lawyers, either as employees, or as retainers, consultants, or in professional capacity.

The banking and financial services industry is fast evolving. The regulatory set up is changing both inside the country as well as outside, with a spate of domestic and international developments.

As regulations change, it is important to equip prospective lawyers with both the fundamentals as well as current practices pertaining to financial markets and transactions.

It is felt that a substantial scope adds value to the current curriculum by introducing a course being taught by an external faculty who is intimately associated with the financial markets.

Vinod Kothari is deeply involved in financial markets over the last more than 25 years, and has extensive experience as adviser and consultant. Some of the laws pertaining to the financial sector have been drafted by Vinod Kothari.

It is expected that students will immensely benefit from the course as the course will provide comprehensive inputs on financial markets and transactions.

2. PEDAGOGY

Reference / citations will be provided in advance, and the participants will be expected to prepare themselves so that the class-room session can be utilised to form a deeper appreciation of the legal principles involved, and the ratios of the case laws.

The course will be taught through class lectures assisted by Power Point presentations of the salient points for easy recall.

Each 'module' will be covered in about two / three class-room session(s) of one hour duration. It is expected that the class room sessions will be interactive.

3. COURSE CONTENT
